Beanstalk Management learns that NFEA is to launch a new programme as Small Businesses need professional support

As predictions for the future are dim in the business sector, professional coaching and consultancy from specialized enterprises may offer solutions for SMEs in need of financial advice, strategy consulting, funding, business brokerage etc. Beanstalk Management has learned that The National Federation of Enterprise Agencies (NFEA) has announced the kick off of a new programme offering membership to companies specialised in the training and support of small and growing businesses. The activities of this new group, which will go under the name of ATC are due to begin on 28 April and will include a broad range of events such as conferences, trainings and local networking. In addition ATC members will have full access to the national business support association and its related expert grouping within the NFEA.

Matthew Byatt, Director at Beanstalk Management stated that “it’s survival of the fittest and only those who are quick to adapt to change will prevail. As an experienced corporate advisory house we are finding that more SMEs are looking to us to help optimize their activities”.
